

Private Educational Loans

Several banks and lending agencies offer private educational loans to credit-worthy borrowers, or to borrowers with credit-worthy cosigners. These loans are not federally subsidized. Because the interest rates for private educational loans are higher than Federal Direct and PLUS Loans interest rates, we recommend that you exhaust your Federal educational loan before considering these loans. When shopping for a private loan, students need to be educated consumers. Always consider the cost of the loan, interest rates, and approval requirements before you begin the application process. Many lenders offer telephone or online applications which can speed up the approval process.

Included below is information on several lenders who offer private educational loans.

The WWU Financial Aid Department provides private lender listings for informational purposes only. We do not endorse any particular lender. We do not accept payment for listing lender information. The private lender list is only intended to provide a sample of potential lenders. Students are encouraged to perform their own due diligence in seeking a private lender.
